

Reimagine Communities

The Songs of the Unsung

Among the clamor of the twitter world, the songs of the marginalized communities normally do not reach the ears of the mainstream.

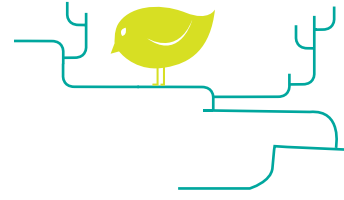

Why are the songs silenced?

A disconnected world that is less interested in where the products come from and who the producers are. Mainstream media is more interested in the kind of news, information and entertainment that in their perspective, engages the urban audience.

Reimagine Communities

Earlier known as Tathya, Reimagine Communities is a platform to sing the songs of the unsung heroes of Indian economy – the marginalized producer communities that form its backbone.

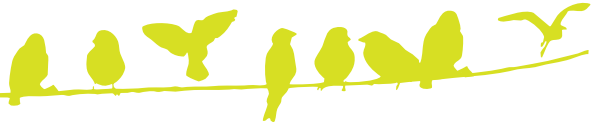

Documentary Films

That tell the stories of various communities such as fisherfolk, farmers, weavers etc., bringing to life their spirit, their journey, the hurdles and the successes.

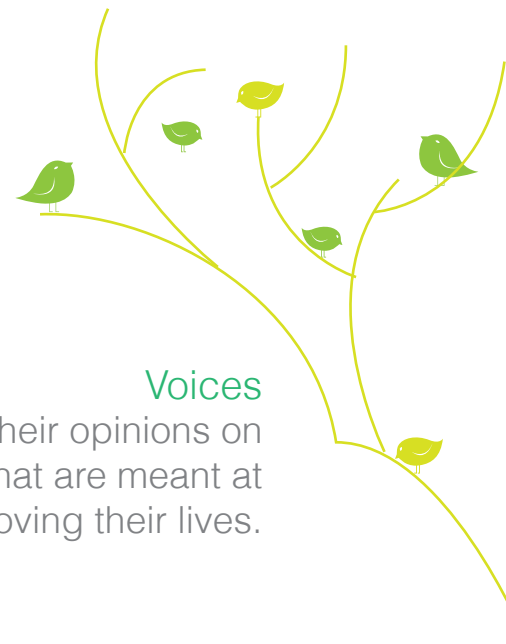

Photostories

That tell the stories of how individuals and communities across India are transforming lives by taking initiatives.

Visual Data

That gives an overview of the different communities in India and break some of the established myths.

Voices

Communities express their opinions on policies and schemes that are meant at improving their lives.

The Song Travels

In its two editions as Tathya, the documentary film festival has travelled to 16 colleges and touched 2000 people in Hyderabad. As an online platform, it has the potential to reach out to many more.
